Her heroes and heroines are always wonderful, her prose is inspired, and her stories have that something extra, that turn you didn't expect, making them a delight to read.The Duke of Derwent decides his son, Charles Lindow, Marquess of Belhaven must marry, and commands Seth Lindow, his adopted son, to find a suitable bride.Seth has spent his life catering to the duke's wishes, but this is one request he finds distasteful to fulfill. Despite his aversion to the idea of anyone marrying the dissolute marquess, he selects Zoe Beckett, the beautiful but spoiled daughter of Baron Beckett. Visiting the family at their country estate, he renews his acquaintance with Eden Beckett, Zoe's older sister.Eden Beckett's life revolves around her painting, gardening, and trying to prevent her willful sister from ruining her reputation. At twenty-six, she no longer dreams of marriage, well almost never. But Seth's kiss ignites a passion she has never felt before and she struggles to cope with the emotions that have upset her tranquil life. When they all meet again in London, Eden, unaware of the duke and Seth's plan for Zoe, is appalled by her sister's determination to attract the attention of that degenerate rakehell, the Marquess of Belhaven. While Seth worries that his lowly ancestry will keep him from being able to make a match with Eden, the duke decides that Eden is a better match for his son. Meanwhile, Eden in trying to keep Zoe out of the clutches of the notorious marquess. The threads of the story twist and turn farther and farther apart, making a satisfying ending seemingly impossible. However, Anne Barbour, a master at pulling all the threads together, manages to weave not only a delightful ending, but a very clever surprise, too. 0 von 0 Kunden fanden die folgende Rezension hilfreich. Another wonderful love story from Anne Barbour Von Ein Kunde Anne Barbour has been one of my favorite Regency authors for several years. Her latest book lives up to the high quality of writing I expect from her. Reading her story, I am completely taken up by the lives of her characters, and taken back to my favorite world: Regency England. A MAN OF AFFAIRS alternately made me smile and brought a tear to my eyes. It's not to be missed by any fan of good writing, sharp characterization, and a wonderful love story. The jacket doesn't do it justice by describing the hero as ineligible. It would be ineligible to fall in love with an impoverished man of affairs, a wealthy, gentlemanly one is, however, a different matter entirely.

Kurzbeschreibung Spinster Eden Beckett has a full life with her gardening, painting and keeping an eye on her willful younger sister Zo. Into her world comes Seth, adopted son of the Duke of Derwent, looking for a bride for the duke's son. Though passions ignite between Seth and Eden, each must obey a primary duty. And Eden will protect her sister from the rakehell marquess if she can.
